“ I will miss his great sense of humor. He could find the bright and amusing side of a difficult situation and make me laugh. He gave me great advice on driving a big bus full of backpackers on narrow country roads, especially when they were hilly or wet. And he readily supplied me with wise counsel on safely driving through the ups and downs of life as well.

I was always impressed by his unabashed expressions of affection in caring for his family when I visited. Hugs and kisses were always generously applied. Mistakes or missteps by others were easily overlooked or pushed aside with a “but there’s such a good person there!”

What a loving and supportive home he provided for his grandchild, Mike, who was encouraged to follow his dream of using his creative talents in boardgame design – hardly the easiest field in which to achieve success. But I never heard a discouraging word, only continued encouragement. I got a kick out of his driving Mike everywhere while the teenage license was postponed. They would have made a great “Mike & Me” television series!

While my experience was with teaching and his with driving trucks, it was he who taught me great lessons in life. Totally without airs, he presented the model of what a person ought to be. I count myself very lucky to have had his acquaintance.
